

Meet the artists – Studio Tour

The studio at the foot of Gellért Hill was opened in 1903, earning it a mention in many of Europe's niche cultural guides. The large art nouveau building has been an important hub for Budapest's multifaceted cultural life ever since the beginning of the 20th century. It is here that the outstanding figures of Hungarian painting cut their teeth, including József Rippl Rónai, who invited Thomas Mann to Budapest in the 1920s. The loft apartments of the large rented blocks on the nearby Béla Bartók út have also attracted dozens of studios, contributing heavily the inspirational atmosphere of this thriving cultural district.
