

High art in every sense – Hungarian National Gallery Tour

The Hungarian National Gallery is rightly regarded as the pinnacle of Hungarian painting, situated as it is atop of Buda's Castle Hill. The extensive art collection spans paintings, sculptures and graphical art from the 11th century right through to the present day. Ever since the city purchased the Eszterházy gallery as the basis for its collection in 1870, it has continuously added new individual works from all schools and genres important to the development of Hungarian art.
